Fall 2007

From the President

Happy Holidays. As we close out the current year and bring in the new, I want to take this opportunity to thank each of you for making 2007 another successful year for ECCTAI. But, first, I encourage everyone to keep our Treasurer, Walter Jackson, in your prayers as he continues his recovery from a stroke. Walt is one of the cornerstones in our Chapter and we all wish him a speedy recovery.

We have a lot to be proud of and thankful for this year. We accomplished our two main objectives — continuing the legacy of the Tuskegee Airmen, and assisting youth in the pursuit of their aviation career goals — through your unwavering support of events and activities throughout the year. The President Bush's presentation of the Congressional Gold Medal to the Original Tuskegee Airmen for their contributions to our nation was one of many memorable events. It took a lot of work and I thank everyone who helped make this event a huge success.

You should all visit the new Tuskegee Airmen Room in the Bolling Club. The 11th Wing did an exceptional job preparing the room that honors Tuskegee Airmen. I believe that many people will learn about Tuskegee Airmen as they visit this room. A superb ribbon-cutting ceremony provided the perfect setting for the official opening of the room. EECTAI thanked the 11th Wing for their support in a special ceremony where we presented replicas of the Congressional Gold Medal to the Wing Commander and other wing members who organized the Tuskegee Airmen Room and the opening ceremony.

We continue to be engaged with the Secretary and Chief of Staff of the Air Force. Secretary Wynne and General Mosley invited members of ECCTAI to the Pentagon for a special meeting recognizing their achievements. The Secretary and Chief also ensured that ECCTAI members were present for the official 60th Anniversary celebration of the Air Force. We plan to stay engaged at the highest level of the Air Force to ensure that our voice is heard on issues of concern to us.

Our Speakers Bureau and Youth in Aviation Program continues to engage many students through the local area. This year we awarded eight grants to deserving students. Through your continued financial support, we hope to expand these programs in the next year. These are just a few examples of the many wonderful things that you achieved this year.

During this time of year we also renew our member and commitment to Tuskegee Airmen and your continued support is vital to the strength of the organization. With several of our members joining the Lonely Eagle Chapter, it is imperative that we get new members to join. Everyone should accept the challenge of bringing at least one new member to the chapter this year. Additionally, your continued participation in Chapter activities is essential to our success. I'd like everyone to find at least one chapter function or event that you can contribute to.

Finally, we passed updated versions of our constitution and by-laws. These documents will now allow our chapter to operate more efficiently and provide better support to our members. These are living documents that we should all strive to continue to improve. Some of the changes incorporated were not implemented as smoothly as we hoped, thus we could not hold a timely election. Most current Chapter officers agreed to stay in office for another year to allow for a proper transition. A special election will be held for the few positions that are open. Please review the documents and continue to provide your recommendations for improvement.

Thank you again for your continued support and I look forward to working with you in the coming year.

Enriching Our Lives, In Ways Big and Small

By Marc Fisher

Sunday, November 18, 2007; C01, Washington Post

When Doc Robinson finally closes shop next month after 55 years in business, he will take with him the very notion of a pharmacist who stops by on his way home from work to deliver your prescription and maybe visit for a while.

Thanksgiving is a time to offer gratitude to a selection of people who make life a bit better, and I'm starting this year with Curtis C. Robinson, 88, grandson of a slave, Tuskegee airman, veteran of 33 combat missions over Italy, who will soon lock up his little base-ment shop on Capitol Hill for the last time. You could look at this as a victory for the chain drugstores that have largely succeeded in wiping out mom and pop operations. Or you could decide instead to shake Doc's hand and think long and hard about what he offered that no chain ever will: knowledgeable advice wrapped in the kind of dedication and service that kept him out late most nights, stopping by his customers' houses with a pill vial and a heart full of friendship.

Survivors pay tribute to the 37 fallen

Tuskegee Airman Cicero Satterfield of Takoma, Park, closes his eyes Wednesday during a flag-folding ceremony in Grapeville.

GRAPEVINE Texas --The bell rang 37 times to mark the deaths of the recently fallen Tuskegee Airmen. Eugene Richardson stood up eight times, once for each friend who had died this year.

"These were all heroes that I knew personally. We went through a heck of a lot together," the 82-year-old World War II pilot said as he fingered his bronze replica of a Congressional Gold Medal.

The ranks of the Tuskegee Airmen, like all veterans of World War II, are thinning rapidly as historians scramble to preserve their memories and solidify their legacy.

Only six Lonely Eagles - the name given to Tuskegee airmen who have passed away - were memorialized in a similar ceremony two years ago. This year, that number increased six-fold.

Nearly 1,000 of the black fighter pilots trained in a segregated Army Air Corps unit in Tuskegee, Ala. Only about 125 are still living.

The airmen were awarded the Congressional Gold Medal in March at a ceremony in the Capitol Rotunda attended by President Bush and congressional leaders. The original gold medal is at the Smithsonian in Washington. Each airman was given a bronze replica.

Robert Ashby, a retired lieutenant colonel and Tuskegee Airman who now lives in Phoenix, said he was sad that more of those pilots "who stood up when the world said sit down" weren't there in March to receive the honor or today to share memories.

"When you look at the armed forces back then, it was full of discrimination. The people around me and the guys who have passed on changed all that, to where the Air Force is as equal opportunity as any place now, if not more," he said.

Even after the black airmen were admitted to the Army, many commanders continued to believe they didn't have the intelligence, courage and patriotism to do what was being asked of them.

Not allowed to practice or fight with their white counterparts, the Tuskegee Airmen distinguished themselves by painting the tails of their airplanes red, which led to them becoming known as the "Red Tails."

Tuskegee Airmen in the News

More than 400 airmen saw combat in Europe, the Mediterranean and North Africa. They escorted bomber aircraft on missions and protected them from enemy fighter planes. Dozens died in the fighting; others were taken prisoners of war.

One thousand World War II veterans die each day. In 2000, there were six million veterans of World War II, but only half of those remain today, said Bob Patrick, director of The Veterans History Project at the Library of Congress.

The project is geared toward recording an oral history of veterans. The task takes on more urgency with smaller groups like the Tuskegee Airmen.

"They are leaving us very quickly and we particularly don't want to lose the very rich and interesting story they present," Patrick said.

At their annual convention in this suburb northwest of Dallas, several original pilots were lined up to sit in front of Ralph Smith's camera and tell their stories. Smith runs the Western Region Tuskegee Airmen Archive at the University of California-Riverside.

So far this year, the archive has recorded more than 100 interviews with airmen and many of the 19,000 other service members, also African Americans from the Tuskegee era, affiliated with the organization.

"This is an opportunity to record history and prevent the plague of prejudice, one airman at a time,"

Smith said.

The Tuskegee Airmen's non-profit corporation has 51 chapters across the country. They promote education initiatives, especially in aviation, among black youth.

Lt. Col. Bertha Jackson, 51, an Air Force flight nurse from New Jersey, said the Tuskegee Airmen laid the groundwork for not only minorities but women. She had watched movies and read stories about the pilots, but said being among them was still a humbling experience.

"To know what they had to go through being in harm's way, then coming home to hate I think that effort has paved the way for me," she said.

Ira James O'Neal, Jr.

On May 1, 2007 at his home in Washington, DC. He was born in Phoenix, Arizona on June 11, 1918. He was drafted into the 1st Army Air Corps in 1942. His career positions included First Sergeant, Squadron Commander, Finance Officer, Physical Fitness Officer, Special Service Superintendent, Security NCO and Security Officer. He was an original Tuskegee Airmen. In 1948, the military was finally integrated; however, Ira recalls that only 14,000 African-American soldiers were allowed to remain in the military service. As a result of the reduction, 5 percent of all African-American pilots, officers and non-commissioned officers were discharged. Although Ira was discharged from the military, he was not deterred from serving his country and in 1949, when he was given the opportunity, he enlisted in the US Air Force and proudly served our country until he retired in 1972.
